“Before joining Lowenstein, I had the privilege to work briefly with retired Justice Morris Pashman, who spoke often about how the best lawyers were self-motivated to strive for professional excellence. My time at Lowenstein reinforced that idea. The best lawyers do not speak about excellence. It is the standard and thus it is expected. To aim higher, you must go the extra mile for the client and in every professional relationship. (My take on ‘the Lowenstein Way’) Success is never guaranteed, but applying this approach greatly enhances the odds.”
