Dmitry guides clients through the complex landscape of intellectual property law with the goal of enhancing their IP assets and protecting their investments. A registered patent attorney with considerable technical experience, he drafts and prosecutes patent applications in the computing science and electrical engineering fields, including computer hardware and software, network architecture and management, communication protocols, wireless communications, image processing, cloud computing, and blockchain-related applications. He also provides counsel on a wide range of intellectual property matters.

Prior to attending law school, Dmitry worked for IBM as an advisory IT architect, where he concentrated on application hosting and integration projects. He designed network infrastructure for e-commerce and customer relationship management application hosting, advised on complex network management and middleware issues, assessed the security of infrastructure and applications, and designed and developed pilot implementations of collaboration applications.
