Kathleen is a highly accomplished technology and regulatory lawyer and former prosecutor with more than 17 years' experience in the public sector. Her practice has a dual focus on compliance and investigations.

As Bureau Chief of the Bureau of Internet & Technology for the New York State Attorney General's Office, Kathleen was at the forefront of regulation, enforcement initiatives, and public policy involving privacy, data security, and consumer protection, among other issues. Earlier in her career, she served as Director of the Office of Special Enforcement in the New York City Mayor's Office, where, as lead counsel, she directed litigation on a number of intellectual property and civil nuisance matters and was a policy leader on issues ranging from data analytics to human trafficking. While with the Mayor's Office, Kathleen also developed the New Business Acceleration Team to streamline regulations and fast-track new business development. Kathleen started her legal career as an Assistant District Attorney for the Bronx County District Attorney's Office in New York, where she prosecuted domestic violence, child abuse, and sex crimes.

Kathleen's public sector experience gives her an edge in counseling emerging and mature companies on a broad spectrum of regulatory issues concerning technology, data security, and privacy. She has in-depth knowledge of matters involving unfair, deceptive, or abusive acts and practices (UDAAPs), as well as the Children's Online Privacy Protection Rule (COPPA), the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Federal Communications Commission, and the Federal Trade Commission. In addition, Kathleen's experience in municipal government and her understanding of how the administrative code affects business has given her a unique perspective on the intersection of commerce and the law. Clients appreciate her insights into how to identify unanticipated problems and develop creative, business-focused solutions.

Kathleen also provides counsel to individuals and companies facing investigations. As outside counsel on internal investigations, she is an effective fact-finder on matters such as alleged employee malfeasance and intellectual property claims, among others. She also represents clients in government-facing investigations, including white collar criminal defense. Clients in this area benefit from both her sophisticated grasp of technology-related criminal matters and her on-the-ground experience as a lead prosecutor in both jury and bench trials.

Kathleen is admitted to appear before the U.S. District Court for the Southern and Eastern Districts of New York.

Kathleen A. McGee comments for CNET on privacy issues associated with Sony's robot dog Aibo, a device equipped with facial recognition cameras and always-listening microphones, warning that "there are legitimate privacy concerns about the products in our homes that gather data about us." McGee says that information can be "bundled and sold in ways that the consumer is not necessarily aware of or may not approve of if she knew about them...What if I'm on a health care regimen with my doctor and I cheat on my diet? Am I now going to be profiled for insurance companies in a less than attractive way?" She cautions that the privacy policy may not offer much guidance on how to erase the device's memory: "The privacy policy is designed to mitigate regulatory concerns...It is not an instrument for the consumer's use. Full stop."

Lowenstein Sandler was featured prominently in Diversity in Action magazine in a piece focused on opportunities in tech law for diverse people with backgrounds in STEM.

Madhumita Datta, Ph.D., discusses her transition from engineer to patent agent to intellectual property lawyer, finding satisfaction in working with inventors by "giving voice to their invention, protecting their legal rights, and bringing their inventions closer to market." Kathleen A. McGee considers lawyers working the area of tech law "to be some of the luckiest because we get to shape the law in the way that very few practices do."

The article also highlights the work of Ed Zimmerman, Chair of Lowenstein's Tech Group, on behalf of LGBTQ rights and against gender bias in the tech field. Ed comments on how recent law school graduates are attracted to tech law because "they grew up in the space and are early adopters." A. Faith English, the firm's Manager, Diversity & Inclusion, adds that her early experiences in private practice, public policy, and social justice have enhanced her ability to develop successful diversity initiatives, remarking on the importance of "having someone who looks like you at the power table."

Law.com highlights how Lowenstein Sandler's White Collar Criminal Defense practice has grown rapidly through the recent recruitment of experienced former prosecutors, including Paul B. Matey, Ryan M. Wilson, Peter Slocum, Elie Honig, Kathleen A. McGee, and two former New Jersey Attorneys General, Anne M. Milgram, and Christopher Porrino. The article quotes Chairman and Managing Partner Gary M. Wingers, who states that the practice's notable growth in business and top-tier talent is the result of a deliberate effort to increase "the depth and breadth of our skill set." He cites Milgram's heading an internal investigation on behalf of the Dallas Mavericks as an example of the caliber of work the group handles and notes that "clients want to see critical mass in the practice" and a team of lawyers "with different backgrounds who can handle lots of parallel investigations."

Kathleen A. McGee is quoted in CNET discussing the rising popularity of smart homes and internet-of-things (IoT) devices among apartment landlords. The article analyzes the benefits and risks that face landlords and tenants when it comes to the use of these innovative products. McGee notes that "landlords are, in theory, in your apartment every day collecting information; tenants suddenly have to choose between no home and a place where they perceive themselves to be spied on."

The New York Law Journal (including this abbreviated coverage), Law360, and ABL Advisor highlight Ryan M. Wilson's return to Lowenstein, now as partner in the Capital Markets Litigation and White Collar Criminal Defense practices, following his tenure as an Assistant U.S. Attorney on President Obama's Residential Mortgage-Backed Securities (RMBS) Task Force in the U.S. Attorney's Office for the Eastern District of New York. Law360 quotes Wilson on his government experience and mentions Zachary D. Rosenbaum (Chair, Capital Markets Litigation) as a draw in coming back to the firm. All three articles quote Wilson on his reasons for returning to Lowenstein, and they note that Wilson is the latest in a series of former prosecutors and trial lawyers to join or return to the firm. Each article mentions one or more of the following former government lawyers who have come to Lowenstein in the past few years: Christopher Porrino (Chair, Litigation Department), Kathleen A. McGee, Elie Honig, Scott B. McBride, and Matthew Boxer. (subscription required to access the New York Law Journal and Law360)
